The Psychology of the House Dress.

(By Misses F. and E. H. H.)
That was a wise woman's club that adopted a "house dress" for its members. In doing so it applied, in the home, the accepted principle that appropriateness of dress is a great aid to any kind of work. This principle has long been accepted in other professions for women; and the fact that a woman's club has had the vision to apply it to the profession of housekeeping is a long step toward placing "house-making"—which I like better than "housekeeping"—because it is a more inclusive term—on the same footing with other professions for women.

It is a well-established custom to instruct the business girl on the importance of being appropriately dressed. There is probably not a housekeeper of average intelligence, who has not cast the stone of criticism at the overdressed girls who go down into the marts of trade; while we have all admired the good taste of the neatly tailored, trimly shod young women, who, we have noticed, are more apt to succeed than their more frantically dressed sisters. Women in all the walks of life admit the importance of being appropriately dressed at public functions. It is a brave woman who would defy the conventions by appearing at an evening reception in a sport skirt and smock, or who would do her marketing in an evening dress.

That many employers of women prescribe a uniform dress for their employees is an indication of the importance that the business man attaches to this question. Department stores, for instance, and restaurants require the women employees to appear in a certain color and style of costume, and who is it to that girl who dares to disobey? It is easy to imagine the consternation we should feel if a professional nurse in response to a call should appear in the patient's room in anything save the regulation wash dress—usually white, and hospital cap of her profession.

In the home, too, those of us who employ domestic help make mistakes and misapprehensions of dress in our minds. If a maid's uniform is a badge of servitude, it is un-American; but if it is required because, owing to its appropriateness, it is an aid to more thorough and successful work, it is American in the best sense of the term, because it makes for efficiency.

When a housewife becomes her own maid, she is too apt to let down the bars of discipline with regard to dress. Too often she considers the home a good place to finish wearing out street clothes no longer wearable in public. It would seem that any self-respecting woman would attach as much importance to her own appearance as to that of her maid, and yet it is not uncommon for a housekeeper, temporarily or permanently maidless, to answer her front door in a disheveled costume, which would bring severe reprimand and probably dismissal to a maid in the same house, should she forget herself so far. And the back door is just as important as the front door, in the matter of dress. The neatly attired woman who answers the tradesman's ring at the back door will get better and more respectful service than the one who answers the ring at the front door in the faded frock or the spotted cardigan sport skirt.

I maintain that the habit of finishing up our searces or tatters or georgettes in housework is a positive deterrent to successful housekeeping. I do not believe that a woman can wash dishes well in a spotted silk skirt and worn georgette blouse, any more than she can be at her ease, and do credit to her husband and herself, in the same costume at an evening reception.

The sensible housewife, whether she does her own work or not, will have a goodly supply of house dresses made of wash material. If she has servants and merely supervises her work, she may indulge herself in the variety of material and pattern to a greater degree than if she does her own work.

For the servantless woman, I would recommend a simple, one-piece pattern, easy to make and easy to launder, with elbow sleeves, of course, and collars. As for material, gingham, percale, calico, or any of the durable wash fabrics are good. The colors can be chosen to please the individual taste. Personally, I prefer all white for several reasons. It launders well without the danger of fading, can be boiled, if necessary, spots and stains are more easily removed, and mending shows less on it than on colored materials, and is more easily accomplished. For these reasons white dresses last longer and are, therefore, more economical. Next in importance to a good supply of house dresses is a generous supply of aprons.

The most systematic housekeeper I know, whose well-oiled household machinery seems to the outsider, at least, to run without a creak, always wears white. In the mornings one-piece white dresses, all made from the same pattern, easily slipped on, and on wash days easily run through her electric washing machine, always keep her looking immaculate and ready for any emergency at her front door, back door, or in her house. In the afternoons, in summer, these dresses are exchanged for a white voile dress or a dainty white blouse and white skirt. In the winter she wears the same house dress, but instead of the white skirts in the afternoon wears a woolen skirt with her blouse, but never her suit skirt. Another housekeeper I know, who makes her house dresses of colored material, always makes one or two aprons to match each dress.

There is a growing tendency among women, fostered by magazines devoted largely to women's interests, to put the work of house-making among the professions of arts and letters, and all professions recognize that dress has an important effect on the work; it is high time that the woman in the home gave her professional home dress more serious thought. So I would recommend to other women's clubs that here they have a fruitful and legitimate field for missionary work among their members.

Seasonable and Tested Recipes.

STEW OF MIXED FISH.

One pound each of salmon, haddock, and oysters make a very good stew, but other kinds of fish may be used, or the stew may be made of one kind only. Cut into dice two good slices of salt pork, and fry on a pan with one onion cut in thin slices until onion is brown. Stir into the mixture three tablespoons of flour, and stir for a minute or two. Add three cups of water or fish stock and stir until it boils. Pour this over the salmon and haddock, cut into pieces of about two ounces and placed in a stewpan. Add a little epiced seasoning tied in cheesecloth, also salt and pepper, and let the fish simmer for twenty minutes. Add the oysters, which should be weighed solid, and cook until the shells separate and crackle. Serve in a deep platter, garnished with parsley, and accompanied by diced, boiled potatoes and carrots.

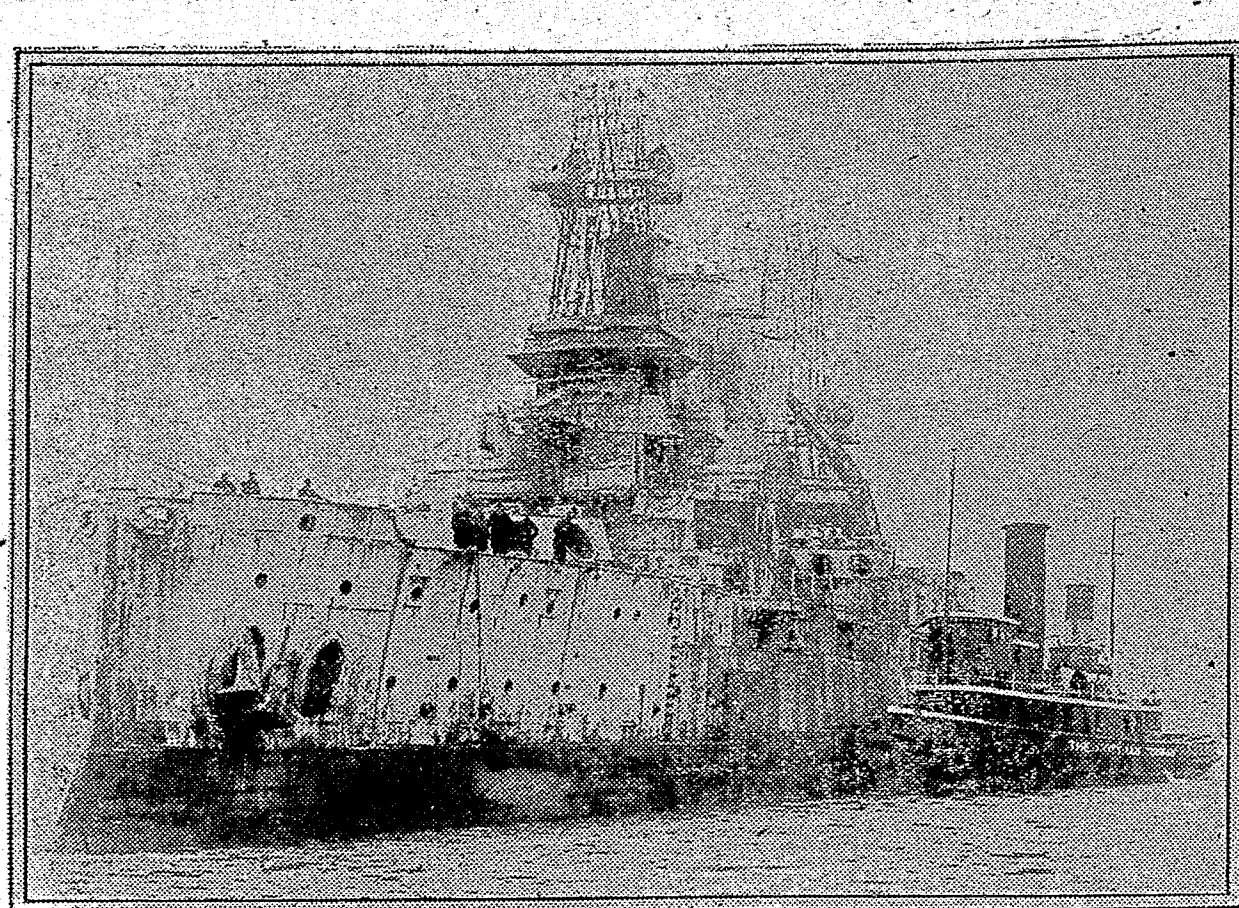

INDIVIDUAL OMELETS.

Beat one egg until a spoonful may be lifted; add one-eighth a teaspoonful of salt and one tablespoonful of water and mix again. Melt one teaspoonful of butter in a hot individual omelet pan and turn in the egg mixture. Shake the pan over the stove to keep the mixture sliding on it, tipping it, meanwhile, let the uncooked part of the mixture run down on the pan. When creamy throughout, fold and turn on to a hot platter.

To make a Sweet Onion spread, one tablespoonful of hot, chopped onion, over half the omelet, fold and turn on to platter and sprinkle with powdered sugar. Other fruits, cooked and sweetened, may be used.

For a Spanish Omelet, use for filling one tablespoonful of Chopped fine half an onion and half a green pepper; put in at breads one slice of ham and two mushrooms; let cook in two tablespoonfuls of butter till softened and yellowed; add one cup and one-half of stewed and strained tomato; add salt and pepper to taste; mix well; evaporated; add one-half a teaspoonful of salt and one teaspoonful of beef extract and set aside until ready to use.

"Lost" U. S. S. Louisiana Towed into Baltimore

The ship being towed from Philadelphia to Baltimore to be dismantled broke loose off the coast of Delaware when a terrific storm came up, with only a skeleton crew of six men, who experienced the worst ordeal of their many years at sea. She was finally towed in by two coast guard cutters.

The New Monster Gun

Developed by the Ordnance Department of the United States army, this gun is said to be one of the most powerful of its type in the world. The new weapon is of the 14 inch 50 calibre type and is capable of hurling a missile 1500 pounds in weight a distance of 23 miles.

Jugoslavia's Beautiful Queen and Her Firstborn

The Last of the Ill-fated Dixmude

An artist's conception of how the French dirigible "Dixmude" came to grief while in flight. The dirigible is thought to have been caught in a heavy storm and exploded in mid-air.

Highest Bridge.

It is claimed that the suspension bridge over the Snake river, near Twin Falls, in southern Idaho, is the highest in this country, if not in the world. The actual measurement is 345 feet from the floor of the bridge to the stream, and the length of the span is 688 feet. Aside from its extreme height, the bridge is of interest because, although materials had to be hauled a great distance, the structure was completed in four months.

Should Live Long.

It is said to be healthy to occasionally let your feet rest higher than your head. Certain jobholders in Washington should live to be a hundred.

Slow Pay.

More work would be done for pay if it wasn't such slow pay.

Egyptian Minister

Seifoullah Youssy Pasha, the first Egyptian minister to the United States, who has arrived to assume his official duties at Washington.

Food for Children.

Some parents feed coffee and tea to their children and then wonder why other youngsters are more robust and healthy. Evil effects from these drinks come not so much from the unnecessary stimulation as from the fact that they destroy an appetite for muscle and bone-building foods like milk, eggs and bacon.

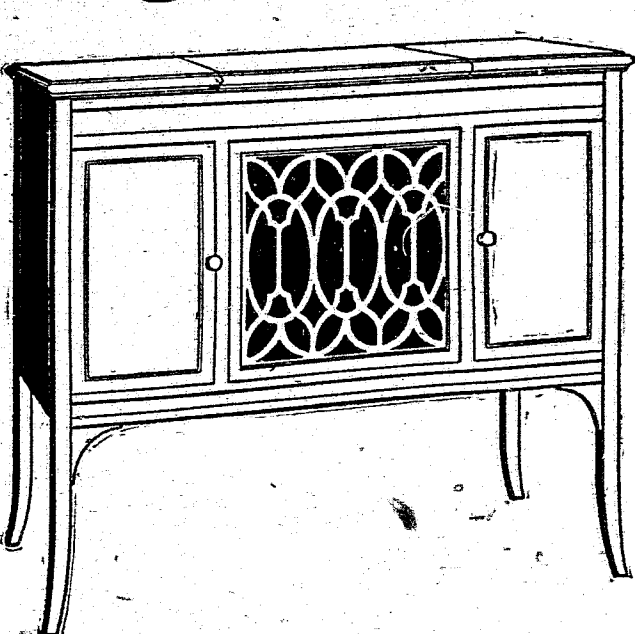

Glass Bottles in 1608.

The first manufactured product to be exported from the American colonies was glass bottles, made in a factory in the woods near Jamestown, Va., before 1608.

A Queer Thing.

One of the queer things about us all is that we'd sooner believe what is told us by a stranger than what is told by our best friends.

Hearing Is Believing

Baby Console $175

BEFORE you buy your New Edison Phonograph, hear the other makes in side-by-side comparison. Let us place a New Edison in your home for a few days without obligation on your part. Ask any talking machine dealer to place his product there at the same time. Then you—a music-lover—decide which is the best phonograph.

The New Edison Baby Console, shown above, combines the appeal of good music and the lure of artistic cabinet work. A beautiful cabinet of brown mahogany, suggestive of antique furniture, encases the wonderful Re-creating devices developed by Mr. Edison's $3,000,000 laboratory research.
